The invention relates to a cleaning agent for the oral cavity comprising a water-in-oil-emulsion with high water content which comprises preferably a balance of at least one oil component and an aqueous phase. In addition to cleanliness, good health or good health requires also the maintenance of the good state of the oral cavity. Therefore, persons keep the oral cavity clean by washing their mouths with customary mouthwash or mouthrinses which, in addition to the primary cleaning agent, also comprise components with special chemical action intended to reduce dental plaque. EP 0221850 A2 describes a cleaning agent based on a mixture of fatty alcohol, monoglyceride, water-soluble salt, and emulsifier. Its purpose was to establish a fast swell so that it can be rinsed out of the mouth quickly. This approach requires a large amount of agent, which cannot be used in sufficient amount because the relationship with the mouth is not adequate for the desired effect. There is no balancing effect between oil, water-soluble salt, and the pH-part of the alcohol, which is the basic reason why the mouth is the area of application. In addition to the desired rinsing out of the mouth, this article, according to EP 0221850 A2 also comprises components which are known per se, such as an emulsifier, or as oil in a solidified state. However, although the emulsifier and the solidified oil are present, the resulting viscosity of the product does not at all satisfy the user. To date no consensus has emerged among manufacturers, consumers and users as to the type of emulsifier best suited in combination with the solidified oil. Une nuit, il y a bien longtemps, un homme a refusé de forcer la porte d'une maison de retraite. Aux agents et aux gardiens qui voulaient le mettre dans le sac, il a crié qu'ils se trompaient. « Mais je suis en fauteuil roulant... Vous allez m

Addictive minimalist game about 90s hip hop! We live in a time of maximalism and instant gratification. Why do we find these big and flashy games hard to get into? Why are we willing to wait years before we get what we want from games? The reason is simple. The limited number of minutes in a day. Finding out that 3 hours of gameplay may be stretched over 5 hours just because of the game's size is very discouraging. THE AIM OF TELEPORTATION LEVELS So how do we solve this problem? If all the games in our collection were small or easy enough, that would be nice. But the fact that every game was bigger than the last doesn't make any sense. We have the same problem in real life. If there are more things we have to do each day, we get stressed and fall behind in our tasks. In the same way, we don't enjoy playing larger games, it's because we find it difficult to find the time to play them. Teleportation is a game about discovery and accomplishment. It is also about challenging yourself and completing a specific number of tasks in a short amount of time. We encourage you to minimize the number of steps to complete each level and set yourself a challenge to get the maximum number of stars in 50 levels. There are no space limits or time limits. You are free to enjoy this game whenever you like, as long as you make the time to play. We hope you'll enjoy the minimalism and

," Hard-to-Find Homes in Back Blocs Are Hitting Hard September 06, 2018 The New York Times published a story on Thursday that describes how house prices in the New York region rose by nearly a third between 2010 and 2017, because tens of thousands of homeowners who live in a few of the boroughs' boroughs had died, and, it is assumed, their property values had not yet appreciated. The combination of Brooklyn and Queens alone resulted in 1,824,765 fewer such homeowners—a transfer of wealth from 543,714 families. This left 2,253,898 real estate holdings available on the market—of which only 119,238 were ultimately sold, leaving 2,133,660 unsold homes in the boroughs. Their prices climbed, and in some cases, soared. In the South Bronx, the median price has now reached nearly $700,000—a median which excludes almost a quarter of the borough, where sale prices are exceptionally high in price. The boroughs may have had some difficulty selling the 2,133,660 properties out of thin air. In 2017, only about 25 percent of the homes in the New York City region being sold were ever advertised, a 20 percent fall compared to the prior year. "In New York City, where virtually all of these homes are owner occupied, the houses weren't even available to be sold," the Times writes. There were simply fewer homes being available for sale. If they were advertised, the number of people who responded to them and the number who could possibly offer enough money to buy them were about the same. Perhaps a narrow sidewalk and an overpass meet today's New York reality better than a subway line. Before the subways, subways, neighborhoods, and highways became accessible to the vast majority of Americans, Americans had to make their homes, schools, and churches accessible to one another as they traversed their landscapes. When I first went to the Vatican, a friend called me several days in advance to say he was going to drive into the city. He did not say he was intending to go farther than the Vatican. He would need a roof over his head. He had to rent a room. I did some research. You've got no roof over your head, or a roof, a rare roof, in the Vatican. And you are in the Vatican? The secretary of state
