Raster brushes draw lines, and the type of brush you're using is determined by the type of line you're drawing. If you're drawing a line, you're using a straight or linear brush. All brushes are in the Tools palette, and you can drag and drop them onto a document or into an Adjustment Layer. Transform: The Transform tool allows you to easily and quickly resize, rotate, flip, and move any type of layer. You can also warp the contents of layers. The Transform tool is often used for animation purposes. The Liquify tools are used for smoothing and editing the appearance of layers without affecting the content of a layer. They are used to align an object. Effects: Effects are another way to add great looking layers or image effects. You can apply them using the Adjustment Layer. Applying effects to an image will make that layer look more like another image, such as one with a similar background. Grunge Brushes A Grunge Brush or Grassy Brush is a brush that looks like grass. They are great for creating grassy images or for combining multiple images in a background to create a dreamy image. Gradient Brushes Gradient Brushes are used for applying a change to an image or for creating great looking designs on an image. You can adjust the colors of the gradient and the direction of the gradient, making it much more flexible than other brush types. Lazy and Hard Blur Brushes Lazy and Hard Blur Brushes make a blurred image with a defined blurred edge. When used correctly, Lazy Blur Brushes make ghosting images in the location where the blurred edge is located. Hard Blur Brushes don't have a defined edge, so they create an imperfect image. Using these brushes is good for creating a "fuzzy" edge. For the best results, use very small amounts of Hard Blur Brushes. Soft and Pixel Blur Brushes Soft Blur Brushes and Pixel Blur Brushes use soft edges to make a blurred image with rounded edges. When used correctly, Pixel Blur Brushes allow you to blur an image in different areas. You can make a blurred image look like it's coming out from one direction or from another. Soft Blur Brushes can be used to blur a whole image or to blur just an object in an image. Wave Brushes Wave Brus
